Stacey, your last-minute cancellation has already interfered with our schedules here at the Corps. I would have appreciated more notice so that I could have attended my meeting with my Chief. I am available Monday from 11:30am to 1:30pm, and not available at all on Tuesday, as I will be out of town.

Thanks David. I have not asked for this delay lightly. I considered that option before emailing you, and concluded that it's important that I be part of the call. As I understand it this one working day delay should not interfere with the current schedule.

Thanks Stacey. I'm sorry that you're unavailable this afternoon. I declined a meeting with the Chief of Engineers at the Pentagon to participate in our call this afternoon. I recommend that we have the call as scheduled this afternoon and have your staff brief you afterwards.

David -

I have had a time-critical matter come up that requires my attention this afternoon. I had expected it to be resolved by late yesterday, but unfortunately there are lingering issues. As a result, I need to push our call to early next week. I can make time on Monday between 10:00 and 3:30 or Tuesday any time after Noon. If those times do not work for you, please let me know what does and I'll work to accommodate your time frames.

David - I'd recalled we'd discussed either. Regardless, I appreciate you accommodating Friday to allow for more discussion both internally and among some of those copied on this email. We're free pretty much all afternoon until 4:00pm, and if it works for you let's aim for either 1:00pm or 2:00pm, at your selection. Thanks. Stacey

David -

Are you still be able to do this call on Friday afternoon? We're coordinating with the regional office and there are some schedule issues we need to accommodate.

At this juncture, I don't think regional counsel will joints for the call as she is out of the office the remainder of this week.

Thanks
